CE F657B, Managing Change Productively credit

While dealing with change is a necessary and understandable part of business, people often react with skepticism and uncertainty that can slow down the pace at which an organization adapts, implements, and gets back to "business as usual." This course will examine why change is resisted. You will learn that the cause can often be linked to the way the change was communicated, however, employees involved in the process and how they were guided through the typical stages of a change process. You will study strategies to avoid these typical roadblocks to effective change management.
